

Our third field observation site was in the sandy mud near the dinosaur excavation site. Some fresh tracks recorded most of the small toes; some recorded only the extended big toe (above). Trails of tracks within a few feet of each other recorded differently, depending on the substrate (lower left). With a small stick elevating the heel, some tracks recorded only the anterior portion of the foot (lower right).

