

Display #3: University of Texas paleontologists admitted that our tooth had the human incisal form, but stated that it lacked the "pulp cavity" and instead only had a "narrow slit-like thing". Dr. Tom James Addison then drilled a modern tooth to the corresponding area and demonstrated that it too had a "narrow slit-like" pulp cavity. Present for each of these sessions were Museum Director Carl Baugh and geologist Don Patton.

